ABSTRACT

This index presents references to 413 children's textbooks and tradebooks about Africa. All of the entries were published in the United States between 1970 and 1979. The main purpose of the index is to aid elementary and secondary social studies and language arts classroom teachers as they develop curriculum for African area study programs. Entries are cross referenced in eight indexes--publications and/or places containing reviews, title, author, date, illustrator, reviewer, series, and subject. A wide variety of information is presented under these headings including translator, pagination, cost, grade level, date of review, ethnic groups studied, evaluation, major content, and biographical information about the author. The subject index lists 12 topics (animals, art, biographies, dance, ethnography, geography, history, language, literature, religion, music, and science) and 43 countries including Algeria, Egypt, Ghana, Gambia, Nigeria, Liberia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Togo, Uganda, and Zaire. In discussing the general assessment of each title, the author relates that some of the books are of poor quality but that they were included in the interest of providing a more comprehensive listing. FOREWORD

This booklet prepared by Patty Kuntz is presented to Wisconsin educators in the hope of updating materials about Africa. The objective of this bibliography is to help bring to the students of Wisconsin that information which will increase their understanding of Africa. This information should prove useful in elementary and secondary social studies programs, and should also be useful for language arts and literature curricula.

Since this bibliography is the first of its kind for area studies programs, your comments will be appreciated.

INTRODUCTION

For the past three years, I have been employed in the University of Wisconsin African Studies' Instructional Materials Center. During my employment while assisting librarians, teachers and education students in selecting books for African unit studies, I became concerned with the difficulty of preparing materials about Africa. Frequently, patrons would complain that they had little or no knowledge about the African continent and had no preparation for teaching African related materials.

In 1977, eight representatives of the regional African Studies Outreach centers[1] met to review their respective program's services. All participants endorsed the idea of the Books About Africa for Children and Youth. Susan Hall, formerly of the School Services Division of the African-American Institute[2], instigated the accumulation of titles. However, due to other commitments, she requested that I continue and complete the bibliography for use by teachers in 1979 as an African Studies contribution to the celebration of the International Year of the Child. With President Carter's endorsement of global education, this bibliography will facilitate coordinators and teachers as well as librarians in preparing African units.

Each title reference in the bibliography preceded by a key number is cross-referenced with a succeeding author, date, illustrator, reviewer, series, and subject index. The 413 titles are a compendium of reviewed textbooks and trade books from 1970 through March, 1979, as found in journals, publications, and African Studies Programs. The title card contains the author and translator, publisher, date of publication, pagination, cost, illustrator, possible grade level, date of review, place of review, and reviewer. In the subsequent author and illustrator indexes, short biographical information is included when available. The subject index establishes categories of study alphabetically -- including biographies, ethnic groups, and geographic areas. The journals containing reviews are readily available in public libraries or by writing to the designated places listed in the abbreviation section.

The method for collecting the titles included card titles previously amassed by Susan Hall in addition to 300 additional ones. Because most of the reviewing journals are available in the Cooperative Children's Book Center and the University of Wisconsin Library School Library, I examined School Library Journal, Booklist, Horn Book, Language Arts, Reviewers Consensus, and Nu-book Service[3] listings. In addition, utilizing the Education Instructional Materials Center, I cross-checked availability of reviews in public and school libraries of IMCs. These reviews were subsequently checked with Kofi Mensah's articles[4] and Nancy Schmidt's numerous publications.[5] Astair Zekiros[6] and Susan Hall's[7] evaluations of textbooks comprised the data for the textbook section.

As I read through each review, I filed data on the title card assigning subject categories based upon a cataloging system which I devised for the African Studies IMCs in Wisconsin and Michigan State Universities. For the reviews which noted a specific rating evaluation, I recorded the information for the final evaluation.

While accumulating titles, I continued my search for information about authors, illustrators, and reviewers. Such blurbs would provide patrons with important background information as to the point of view and actual knowledge of Africa and youth literature. Some biographical data I gleaned from several reference books on authors and illustrators of children's literature. However, most of the writers of books about Africa are not included in such volumes. Therefore, I sought copies of books at various libraries throughout the cities mentioned above. Frequently, one may obtain biographical information from bookjackets, provided that the cataloging department has not removed the jackets. It is for the lack of information, that many authors and illustrators have no biographical citations in their respective indexes.

A third task involved inquiring of reviewers about their background. In order to secure information I wrote to the children and youth editors of the major reviewing journals as well as to individual reviewers. Unfortunately, the effort resulted in minimal replies: many reviewers had changed places of employment leaving no forwarding address; others did not reply; while some merely reiterated that they reviewed books according to the policy of the given journal.

After making cards for title, author, illustrator, series, subject, and reviewer entries, I proceeded to record the cross-listing by number from the title index. Because teachers and curriculum coordinators indicated that a publisher and publication's index most likely would not be used, I did not include them in the bibliography. However, the major reviews were found in School Library Journal, Booklist, and Nancy Schmidt's two publications of 1975 and 1977. As for the publication companies, Atheneum, Collier, Coward, Dial, Doubleday, Dutton, Four Winds, Greenwillow, Garrand, Harcourt, Houghton-Mifflin, Lippincott, McGraw-Hill, Putnam, Random House, Scribner's and Watts carried the largest selection of books about Africa.

Because grade or interest level is difficult to determine and often misleading for a patron, I did not include a separate index for this category. Individual needs will best determine the appropriateness of a book. Furthermore many reviewers acknowledge that they have no basis for discriminating grade levels; therefore, they do not indicate grade levels in their reviews. When some reviewers did indicate a grade, age, or interest level in their reviews, I included this information in the title entry. In addition to the different means of determining the age, grade, and interest level, the author's style contributes to the variation within a given series. Consequently, I recommend that patrons of this bibliography examine the reviews with care.

In order to determine the growth in reviews of children and youth books about Africa, I tabulated subject area of texts published during the past ten years. Beginning in 1970, published reviews increased from 34 titles. However, in 1976, published reviews diminished to 39 from the previous four year growth. This decline could possibly be explained by the bicentennial publications. However, the subsequent years show a rise: 57 in 1977 and 53 in 1978. After the general social science books, special topics focus on King Tutankhamun, ancient Egypts, of folktales. In 1979, by April seven books had been reviewed: two on social science, two about folktales, two about ancient Egypt, and one animal book.

The categories of the subject index are determined by reviewers and reviewing journals, categories used in other youth and children's bibliographies, and my own knowledge. Since many books are comprehensive studies of a country, I assigned these books in the category of social science. When the book concentrates on geography, an ethnic group, history, or political science, and so forth, I have placed these titles in the most specific category.

The bibliography concludes with a general assessment of each title. Based upon the principles of evaluation established by the eight African Studies[8] centers, Susan Hall, and Nancy Schmidt, I have assigned stars to titles indicating recommended books. Three stars signify superiority. The patron of the bibliography is reminded that a preliminary screening of the books occurred prior to the reviewer's evaluation. Consequently, the bibliography is a selective evaluation of books containing redeeming qualities. Despite the fact that a number of books are of poor quality, these titles remain for a comprehensive listing of reviewed books.

This bibliography comprises an inclusive listing of reviews of youth and children's books about Africa published in the United States for Americans since 1970. It is the expectation of the compiler that a periodic updating of the bibliography will occur yearly. Because Africa remains obscure for many students and teachers, this bibliography is designed to facilitate curriculum planning. Although textbooks and trade books continue to be published, many books fail to meet the necessary standards. Stereotypes and misinformation persist in attractively created books and series. One soon discovers that most children's books readable and containing glossy illustrations are stylistically un-African or dishonest. With this bibliography a teacher, student, librarian, and curriculum coordinator may diminish misunderstanding and may develop lesson plans more sensitive and critical concerning the issues of over fifty countries in Africa for primary and secondary students in the United States.
